RE: ORGANIZATIONS CALL FOR REVIEW OF COUNTRY CONDITIONS AND DESIGNATION OF TEMPORARY PROTECTED STATUS FOR PAKISTAN

Dear President Biden, Secretary Mayorkas, and Secretary Blinken,

The undersigned 146 state, local, and national climate justice, civil rights, immigrant rights, human rights, educational, faith-based, and diaspora organizations write to urge Secretary Mayorkas to review country conditions and designate Temporary Protected Status (TPS) and Special Student Relief (SSR) for Pakistan. An ongoing humanitarian and climate crisis in Pakistan makes the return of its nationals dangerous and inconceivable. Catastrophic flooding has left one-third of Pakistan underwater, and devastated the country’s healthcare, education, and agricultural infrastructure.¹ It has resulted in the displacement of 7.9 million people, impacted more than 33 million people, and caused the death of at least 1600 people and counting.² After record flooding, the UN health agency warned that the country is on the verge of a public health crisis as millions suffer from waterborne diseases.³ We believe that the ongoing environmental and humanitarian situation, and extraordinary and temporary conditions in Pakistan warrant an immediate designation of TPS and SSR.

I. Temporary Protected Status (TPS) and Special Student Relief (SSR)

Temporary Protected Status (TPS) is a humanitarian protection and may be used in any circumstance that warrants it under the statute. The Secretary of Homeland Security can designate a country for TPS if the country is experiencing ongoing armed conflict, natural disaster, or other extraordinary and temporary conditions. TPS allows its beneficiaries to stay in the United States during the designation period and receive work permits. It is a life-saving, blanket protection, that allows people from a designated country to remain in the United States while conditions in their home country make safe return impossible.

Special Student Relief (SSR) by the Secretary of the U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS) gives international students more flexibility related to their duration of status, course load, and employment eligibility in recognition of emergency circumstances occurring in their home countries.\(^4\) SSR is an option when emergent circumstances occur in a given country—“world events that affect F-1 Students from a particular region and create significant financial hardships, such as but not limited to: natural disasters, wars, and military conflicts.”\(^5\)

II. Conditions that warrant a designation of TPS for Pakistan

A. Devastating floods in Pakistan

Around 33 million people, including approximately 16 million children, have been affected by this year’s heavy monsoon rains in Pakistan, which have brought devastating rains, floods, and landslides.\(^6\) More than 7.9 million people have been temporarily displaced and are in need of assistance.\(^7\) More than 1,400 health facilities had been fully or partially damaged and access to “health facilities, healthcare workers, and essential medicines and medical supplies” remained the main healthcare challenge, the World Health Organization (WHO) concluded through their study.\(^8\) Extreme weather events, driven by climate change, are increasingly contributing to community displacement and new patterns of internal and global migration.

B. Humanitarian crisis

Ranked the eighth most vulnerable country to global warming,\(^9\) Pakistan is currently underwater due to eight consecutive weeks of flooding. Relief agencies have warned that the wait for the water to even recede could last at least six months.\(^10\) In the interim, millions of people have no access to clean potable water or safe shelter and have lost their ability to work the lands impacted by the floods in a country, where agriculture is the predominant source of livelihood.\(^11\) Over 1.1 million houses have been washed away as a result of the flooding and an estimated

\(^7\) Id.

18,000 schools have been destroyed, a vital need for education for children and the community.\(^\text{12}\) The “2022 Pakistan Floods Response Plan (FRP)” was jointly launched by the Government of Pakistan and the United Nations, in Islamabad and Geneva.\(^\text{13}\) The resulting humanitarian crisis would only be exacerbated by an intake of Pakistani nationals if returned from the United States, as the country is unable to handle the return of nationals.

While the country has openly declared the need for humanitarian aid, the underlying fears of economic downfall are stoked by dwindling remittances from foreign countries. The inflow of remittances in Pakistan from foreign countries fell 12.3% in September 2022.\(^\text{14}\) Remittances are key to the country’s foreign exchange reserves, as the second largest source of foreign exchange in the country.\(^\text{15}\) Remittances sent by millions of Pakistani migrants worldwide have supported the country’s economy by improving livelihoods and easing the pressure at times of economic crisis, such as energy crises, food insecurity, and higher foreign debt repayments.\(^\text{16}\) In these difficult times of humanitarian crisis and political instability, the economics of remittances are necessary to rebuild the country. A designation of TPS and SSR would allow Pakistani immigrants including students the ability to work in the country and provide relief to their families back home while improving the economy.

\section*{C. Political crisis}

The catastrophic crisis has been compounded by the lack of resources. Decades of political instability have displaced over a million people, a number that has consistently grown over the years.\(^\text{17}\) The constitutional crisis under ex-prime minister Imran Khan and the uncertainty of elections and security have escalated matters. The situation has been impacted by the current geo-political relationships with the United States. Since losing power, Khan has stoked populist fury with unfounded conspiracy theories accusing the United States of orchestrating his removal.\(^\text{18}\) He welcomed the Taliban takeover of Afghanistan and embraced Vladimir Putin the day of the Ukraine invasion.\(^\text{19}\) Shehbaz Sharif, who replaced Khan following the no-confidence vote, recently stated during an interview that good relations with the United States were critical for Pakistan for better or for worse.\(^\text{20}\) People in Pakistan have taken to the streets in support, opposition, and frustration with the current crisis. The circumstances are not conducive to the return of Pakistani immigrants from the United States. The ongoing crisis has left many regions of the country uninhabitable and unsafe. Implementing TPS would allow Pakistani nationals to remain in the United States until Pakistan recovers from this environmental disaster.

III. TPS is well established and has been utilized by Congress and prior administrations during natural calamities

The flooding in Pakistan is expected to have implications on U.S. security interests. Congress is expected to evaluate whether or not U.S. assistance in response to the catastrophic floods would serve U.S. interests, especially economic and security objectives. Regardless of the conversations around the impact of flooding on the United States, Pakistan’s suffering is a direct result of global inaction to the threats of climate change and an unfair consequence for a country that contributes less than one percent to global carbon emissions. For a country with CO2 emission of 0.98% per capita, contributing less than 0.5% to the climate crisis, Pakistan has repeatedly been underfunded and under-resourced by the international community. Governments can no longer ignore their responsibilities to fortify communities vulnerable to global warming, center safe pathways for migration as essential climate adaptations, enact stronger legislation to eliminate carbon emissions, increase mitigation efforts, and implement equitable climate finance like the Loss & Damage Finance Facility being discussed under the UN Convention on Climate Change.

The U.S. government has provided an estimated $71 million for development aid to Pakistan for FY2022, with $84 million requested for FY2023. The funding of over $1 million in grants, project support, and for programs adapting to address the long-term impact of the 2022 floods is expected to continue. USAID has deployed a disaster assistance response team to evaluate the damage and continuing needs. The international community must heed demands now and build out a long-term strategy to address the growing displacement of people for reasons related to climate, beyond monetary aid such as reevaluating border policies, reassessing country obligations to asylum seekers, and proactively creating safe pathways for those whose homes are affected to ensure a world in which all humans can live with dignity.

“Granting TPS to Pakistani nationals in need is a small but consequential step that the United States can take to immediately reduce the human suffering caused by this natural disaster and would reaffirm our stance as a global leader committed to humanitarian relief efforts and protections,” Senators wrote in a letter calling on President Biden to grant TPS to Pakistani nationals residing in the United States.29

IV. Conclusion

We urge the administration to immediately designate TPS and SSR for Pakistan and provide protection for Pakistani immigrants living in the United States who would face unsafe and life-threatening conditions if returned. In addition, we request a registration period of at least a 180-days for those who would benefit, and an outreach campaign to inform the impacted community.

The movement led by diaspora groups highlights that the pattern of designations granted has continued to exclude or delay consideration of Black and Brown majority countries for TPS. The call for TPS and SSR for Pakistan reiterates the need for the designation of all countries that qualify and where individuals are suffering regardless of racial makeup.

Sincerely,

National
